Mrs. William Brown Meloney, chair man of the Marie Curie Radium Fund Committee, salled to visit Mme, Curic with whom she will return to New York by the Olympic within three weeks. Mmc. Curie will be welcomed by representatives of 160,000 college women headed by Mrs. Edgerton Parsons, president of the New York branch of the Association of Collegiate Alumnac, and will be escorted to Washington, where she will receive, on May 20, from the hands of President Harding a gram of radium worth $100,000. Mrs. Meloney sald that while the fund was not complete, she was sure the women would not fail to make it so, and she advised the contributors to give now to the committee's treasurer, the Equitable Trust Company.

John A. Penton, editor of the Marine Review of Cleveland, sailed to make a study of shipping abroad. He said a real American policy in shipping did not mean injury to foreign shipping, and that America should demonstrate to the foreign nations that she had no desire to do injury to the rear an ever advantage of the party said he was a new erg days. nittee, salled to visit Mme, Curie that America should demonstrate to the foreign nations that she had no desire to do injury to their maritime interests. Mr. Penton said he saw a new era dawning in shipping, and that a merchant marine for the United States meant that there would be more friendly legislation on behalf of all shipping entering American ports—a "lightening of the burdens now imposed by our navigation laws upon British, French and other foreign as well as American ships."

Other passengers were Col. Arthur Woods, formerly Police Commissioner, who said he intended to spend about two months in England, Germany and Belgium solely on business; McLane Van Ingen, Gen. Charles H. Sherrill, Major George Haven Putnam, Miss Caroline Stevens of Castle Point, P. G. Wodehouse, novelist, and Mrs. Wodehouse; Lady Julia Henry, Count Suberville, Henry Mason Day, president of the American Foreign Trade Corporation, and Mr. and Mrs. Victor Lowenstein.

'Liliom,' New Play Brilliant Cameo

of Career in Last Production of Season.

The Theatre Gulld made its last production of the season at the Garrick Theatre last night, and, like all swan songs, it was the acme of its career. "Liliom," announced as a legend in seven scenes and a prologue by Franz Molnar, was Barrie done in terms of realism instead of sentimentality. It surmounted the curious mixture composing it, threading its way delicately between daring and reverence, allegory and stark realism, with glints of rude humor and moments of primitive emotion that took fire from more than the red spotlight. In the end it shaped itself as a most In the end it shaped itself as a most

In the end it shaped itself as a most bizarre and brilliant cameo, a true adornment to the American stage.

Moinar has revised the question that Barrie put in "Mary Rose." The Scotch playwright was concerned with the speculation whether, if the dead could return, they would still find themselves loved by a 'changed world—that seemed to be as near as most persons could. to be as near as most persons could get to his meaning. In "Lillom," Molrar has considered whether those who depart this life, bringing misery on others, could do anything to undo the wrongs their characters had imposed. As the machinery for this inquiry he

Power of Personality.

The Hungarian dramatist's answer would appear to be that such a soul would be governed by the immutable laws of its character, modified, but not fundamentally altered, by a period of celestial probation. In other words, personality is more powerful than death, leaving its effects for years on those remaining below.

For the chief resistible, from which the view past the Ambrose Channel lightship is a superb sea picture. A delightful orchestra plays on the pier for the lightfooted on all decks.

The guests last night on the Irresistible enjoyed a delectable dinner and heard Admiral Dr. Harries tell how he had a big building on his hands and nothing for it to do, so he made a restaurant out of it. Waiters came in and gave him French cheer. More waiters bore in two square yards of cake bearing the legend "Special Flotilla Extra: Yo, ho, boys, the dinner was not bad." Then they cut it.
